fling with a small wand to scowre the coast, and make place for the rascall Players (for indeed these were the worst company, and such as in their owne Countrey are out of request) you have not scene in the Innes of Court, a Hall better made: a thing, me thought, most derogatory to the Maiesty of a King of France.

And lately at Paris (as they tell vs) when the Spanish Hostages were to be entertayned, he did vs her it in the great Chamber, as he had done here before; and espying the Chayre not to stand well vnder the State, mended it handfomly himselfe, and then set him downe to giue them audience.

*His
gree.*

It followeth, I speake of his descent and Pedigree; wherein you shall see hee is lineally descended of the house of Burbon, from Robert, Earle of Clermont, yonger sonne to Lewes, surnamed the Saint, from whome (for default of heires males in the house of Valois, descending of Philip le hardi, the elder brother) hee is now rightly entituled to the Crowne of France. The lineall descent of this house of Burbon, whose word is Esperance (Hope) is this:

Saint

Saint Lewes had two sonnes, namely,

1

Philip le Hardy, King of France.

YOU may obserue in this waste space of paper, that in the yeere 1328. Philip, who was sonne to Charles, Count of Valois, came to the crowne, by the name of Philip the sixth of Valois: since when, all the Kings of this elder house are call'd (de Valois) not that it is the sur-name of their Family, which most writers, and euen the French themselves haue thought, Haillan, lib. 3. d' Estat.

Robert, Earle of Clermont, married to Beatrice, daughter to Archibald of Burbon.

Lewes, Count of Clermont, & first Duke of Burbon, married to Mary, Countesse of Heynalt.

Iaques, Duke of Burbon, married to Iane de S. Paul.

John, Duke of Burbon, Count of March, married to Katherin, Countesse of Vandosme.

Lewes of Burbon, Count of Vendosme, married to Iane of Lauall.

John of Burbon, Count of Vendosme, and Isabel his wife.

Francis of Bur. Count of Vendosme, to Mary of Luxembroughe, Countesse of S. Paul.

Charles of Burbon, to Francis of Alencon.
